Reading this book calls to mind the hero Odysseus who overcame many obstacles on his way home from the Trojan wars. His goal was to reach home and be with his wife. He even tied himself to the mast of his ship to avoid the temptations of the sirens on the island who sang an alluring song to entice sailors to their island. The other sailors plugged their ears with wax to prevent hearing their song, but Odysseus wanted to hear their song, so he overcame the distraction of allurements. Bob points out to the reader that everyone has the treasure of success within. All we have to do is set goals, keep them in mind and avoid distractions. Well worth the read. Very inspiring, and rewarding.
