Martin Brueckner, Dyann Ross, Erin Brockovich : Under Corporate Skies: A Struggle Between People, Place, and Profit before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Under Corporate Skies: A Struggle Between People, Place, and Profit:

Relating the story of a tiny town pitted against a strong corporation, this account strives to voice the concerns of local communities when they come into conflict with corporate profits. With the help of Erin Brockovich, the small town of Yarloop in Western Australia is fighting its powerful neighbor, Alcoa World Alumina. Their struggle is over social, health, and environmental concerns surrounding Alcoa's Wagerup alumina refinery. The stories told here are shared by communities around the world amidst ongoing industrialization and resultant collisions between social and economic interests. Depicting life under corporate influence, this study explicitly illustrates that profits matter—but not more than people and place.

"The book explores the complicated issues that have arisen from the location of the Wagerup refinery . . . the authors argue more for a shared vision and working partnerships."—The West Australian
